

A Year in Review:

Primary Health Care

in Western Sydney

WentWest, the Western Sydney Primary Health Network (WSPHN), is proud to share its first interactive Annual Review 2022-23, 'Evolution', which showcases the amazing work of health professionals and community members in Western Sydney.

Commissioning Health Services

It is the role of a Primary Health Network to commission regional health services that best support the needs of local communities. This year, WentWest managed 470 contracts with service providers, including not-for-profits, general practices and residential aged care facilities, to deliver services that address everything from chronic health to mental health, early years to aged care, urgent care to alcohol and other drug support. You can read more about the types of free services available to you and your family at: annualreview.wentwest.com.au/our-programs

Supporting General Practices

Did you know that there are over 340 general practices in Western Sydney supporting 1.5 million patients?

WentWest works closely with these practices to provide them with education, resources and support to help them provide quality, patient-centred care in our community.

Head to Health

Last year, WSPHN worked with over 130 mental health providers to deliver 56,433 sessions of care. One of the services, Head to Health, was so successful that it led to the opening of a permanent Head to Health Adult Mental Health Centre in Parramatta. This new site has been custom-built and co-designed with community, and offers free mental health care and support navigating to other services. The centre is open 9am-9pm on weekdays and 3-7pm on weekends every day of the year.

Urgent Care

Over the past year, we expanded urgent care services in our region so that more people can access care for non-life-threatening conditions outside of a hospital emergency department.

Urgent care services offer free treatment for injuries and illnesses such as fractures, dislocations, wounds, minor burns and cuts requiring stitches.

Last year, over 2000 people were treated at an Urgent Care Service Centre, so next time you or a loved one have an urgent injury or illness that isn't life-threatening, call the Urgent Care Line on 1800 371 372 to be assessed and find out if you can be treated at a local urgent care service.
